

slapper sending Feyerabend off the circuit. Russell recovered to chase Dudley, but after he'd nearly run up the back of him, he retired to the pits. Mike Dodd took up the chase and was 0.85sec shy of Dudley at the flag.

Simon Durrell won four of the six Legends Cars races and was second in the other two, which fell to Lawrence Davey. While five races produced a combined winning margin of less than two seconds, Davey's later win was by almost five.

Davey's hopes of catching Durrell for the Winter Series title took a knock when he was sidelined in a multi-car crash at Druids on the first lap of race three. This paved the way for Oli Poyser, who logged a trio of second places and three thirds.

With just a little more luck, Frazer Corbyn and Julian Cutler could have been triple Monoposto winners. Corbyn was en route to winning the first 1200/1600 race when his clutch failed. That let in John Lord, who chased Corbyn home in both of Sunday's races. Sixteen-year-old Scott Mansell finished a solid third in each race, behind the bigger-engined cars.

Cutler's misfortune was of his own making as he fell off on the first lap of practice and had to start with a 10 second penalty in the first 1800/2000 race. Even so, he came through to chase home winner Peter Lebas.

Cutler went on to win the second race, Lebas suffering transmission failure while pressuring him. His demise let in Janine Payne, who had driven her immaculate car to third in the opener. With Lebas out, Cutler took race three from the shadowing Jensen Lunn.

Brothers Simon and James Diffey, won both legs of the two-part Alfa Romeo enduro. Keith Waite and Chris Snowdon were second on aggregate, clear of Dutch father and son pairing Anton and Ben Mets.

Rod Birley got enough of a lead at the rolling start in the first Formula Saloon race to keep Garry Woodcock at bay, but Woodcock reversed the placings on Sunday.

An "ecstatic" Adam Pearless scored his first car race win in a weak Formula Ford event, while Tony Sinclair stormed through from a 10sec penalty (see News) to grab the GT, Sports & Saloon honours.
